Q: Prove that $a+b+c=0$ has no solution where a,b,c are real Prove that $a+b+c=0$ has no solution where a,b,c are real How do I prove this? I was told that I can take $a=b=c$ and argue that $a+b+c$ is zero but I'm not sure how to do that. A: $a+b+c=0$ $a=b=c$ $a+b+a=0$ $3a=0$ $a=0$ So $a=b=c=0$ are the only solutions. [Evaluation of the psychometric properties of the Turkish version of the Center for Epidemiologic Studies Depression Scale (CES-D-T): a study of an undergraduate population in Turkey]. Depression is a commonly seen problem in clinical settings, and early detection and evaluation are crucial for the clinical treatment of such problems. The purpose of this study was to determine the internal consistency and reliability of the Turkish version of the Center for Epidemiologic Studies Depression Scale (CES-D-T) in an undergraduate population. The study was conducted in a university with a total of 1330 undergraduate students and comprised 538 females (40%) and 792 (60%) males. The data were collected from a total of 1573 subjects between 12 to 21 years of age. The internal consistency of the scale was assessed with Cronbach alpha, test-retest reliability was assessed with Pearson correlation, and convergent validity was determined by the correlation of the scale with Beck Depression Inventory. The mean total score on the scale was calculated as 4.5 ± 5.2 (standard deviation). The scale had a high Cronbach alpha value of 0.96. The test-retest reliability was calculated to be 0.92. The correlation between the scale and the Beck Depression Inventory was found to be significant
